

standard GitLab hiring process. The process for team members interested in applying for an interim role is as follows:

1. Team Member: Apply for the interim position in Greenhouse.

Once a team member successfully completes the interview process and is selected for the interim period, the following steps should be taken to ensure the team member is set up for success in their interim role.

1. CES: Issue a Job Change Letter to finalize the beginning of the interim period. The Letter should include: interim job title, start date, and end date (if known). Job Change letters are important as this is the process by which Total Rewards is notified of change from Greenhouse.
1. People Connect: Update the team member's job and business titles in Workday to reflect that they have started an interim role e.g. Senior Manager, Engineering (Interim). This update serves as the SSOT for tracking interim start and end dates, in addition to providing transparency pertaining to who is currently executing in an interim role. Job code and job grade will remain the same, as interim periods have no impact on compensation i.e. do not update any other fields when initiating the Change Job Process.
1. Current Manager: In the instance that there are direct reports that need to be moved to an Interim Manager this change needs to be initiated by the Current Manager or where necessary the People Business Partner for the respective group in Workday by following the Change Manager Process. The philosophy here is that if a team member has successfully gone through the interview process and has demonstrated they are ready/able for an interim period in a manager role, they have the required level of EQ and discretion to have direct reports in Workday. It is, of course, expected that should the interim period not end in promotion, the team member continue to treat confidential information confidentially.

Ending Interim Period

When the interim period comes to a close, one of two outcomes can occur:

- The team member successfully completes the interim period aligned with the success criteria and moves into the interim role permanently.
 - As a general guideline, the interim period should last no less than 30 days, and no more than 4 months .
 - The People Business Partner should submit the promotion request through Workday using the Change Job job aid including the promotion document to make the change official. In Workday, the reason for the change should be Promotion - Promotion. The accomplishments leading up to the interim and during the interim can be used for the promotion document. The manager is responsible for creating the promotion document and recommending a compensation increase. Note: Promotion documents are only required if the team member's move results in a promotion. For lateral moves, we do not require promotion documents.
- The team member does not complete the interim period successfully or decides that the manager track is not something they want to pursue, and moves back to their role prior to the interim period.
 - A feedback session between the team member and hiring manager should take place, so it is clear to the team member why the interim period was not successful.
 - The People Business Partner at the request of the Manager should submit a Workday Change Job Process and Approval Flow in Workday to revert the team member's job title once the interim period comes to an end.

- Not successfully completing the interim period does not mean the team member can not move into a similar role in the future

Regardless of the outcome, when the interim period ends, the manager should review the Criteria For Eligibility for the Interim Bonus and submit an interim bonus request for the team member. Please ensure that the full bonus calculation is laid out in a comment of the bonus submission.

Updating Interim Movements in Workday

If you receive a Job Change letter to an interim role, process the change by:

1. Saving the letter to Documents > Contracts & Changes Document Category in Workday
1. Review for compensation change
1. Access Level
 - Interim roles - Access changed (if required)
1. Update Job title (if required)
1. Update Manager (if required)

Note: There are no changes that are made in Workday for acting roles. To track acting positions, managers should complete this form.

Acting

A person "acting" in the role is someone who occupies a role temporarily and will move back to their original role. "Acting" in a role may be to experiment with the role to determine if it fits an individual's career development path goals, or may be filling in for a vacant role while we hire someone to fill the role permanently. While interim is only applicable to the Engineering division, acting is used across GitLab.

Interviews are not required for Acting roles as they generally do not end in promotion, nor are direct reports in Workday generally moved to Acting managers. The process for selecting someone for an acting position is:

- Upcoming Acting roles will be discussed during staff meetings.
- Leadership can gather interest from their team members for the upcoming acting roles.
- The hiring manager will determine the most suitable team member for the acting role.
- Please make sure that the department head is in the loop and supportive of the acting period and candidate selected before moving forward.

When the acting period ends, the manager should review the Criteria For Eligibility for the Interim Bonus and submit an interim bonus request for the team member.

Acting Roles and Internal Mobility

In the event that a team member is working in an acting capacity in a role that then becomes an officially open position, the team member in the informal acting capacity may be considered for the open role along with other candidates. If the team member demonstrates interest in making the acting position permanent, the following process should be followed:

1. Team member expresses interest to their manager in pursuing the position on a permanent basis.

1. Team member reaches out to the Hiring Manager to receive feedback on their performance in the role thus far in the acting capacity.

1. Team member is welcome to apply for the position in Greenhouse aligned with our standard hiring practices.

Note: If the Hiring Manager and acting team member mutually agree to move forward with consideration for the role, the position is at the same or lower job grade as their current role, the position is within the same division, and the position is not a people management position, a formal interview process may not be required. If the Hiring Manager prefers to not include an interview process, they must connect with their aligned People Business Partner (PBP) to ensure they are supportive. This interview exception possibility exists due to the unique experience team members in acting positions have to demonstrate their ability to be successful in the position over time.

1. After the team member officially moves into the open role, a backfill position will be created.

Demotions

Demotions are not always considered a step backwards. It may be an opportunity for a team member to acquire new skills or to move to a role that more closely aligns with their area of interest. To demote one of your direct reports, a manager should follow the following steps:

- If the demotion is due to performance, the manager should discuss any performance issues or possible demotions with Team Member Relations.
- Demotions should also include a review of compensation and equity in the google doc. Managers should consult with Total Rewards team on these topics; and of course always adhere to the Global Compensation Calculator.
- Once agreement is reached on the demotion and changes (if any) in Team will act as the point of escalation to have any demotion reviewed and approved by the Compensation Group once the relevant google doc is complete.
- Once approved, the manager informs the individual and should request the necessary changes by submitting a request via HelpLab. A Job Change Letter will then be created.
- The People Connect team should then follow the process listed under the For People Connect Team: Processing Promotions & Compensation Changes.
- Communication should be on a need-to-know basis only and should not be made public out of respect for the individual.
- The manager will initiate any necessary access requests or access change requests.

Job Title Specialty Changes

Job title specialties are used to indicate a stage, group and/or a specific focus area of the team member within their responsibilities. These specialties are not part of the job title, but are used to feed into reporting around stage, group and/or focus area investments. It is also a resource for the People Group and leaders to leverage to review organizational health metrics and ratios.

If any changes are required to a team members Job Title Speciality, the manager should create a HelpLab case for the People Connect team with the new job title specialty information along with the effective date of the change. If a new Job Title Specialty that does not already exist needs to be created, please open an issue to get it created in Workday using the Workday: Job Title Specialty Request template. It is an important manager responsibility to ensure this field remains accurate in Workday.

Job Title Specialty Guidance For Managers

Different departments at GitLab manage job title specialties in different ways. Below, we have outlined guidance for certain departments to document how they think through job title specialties to ensure a consistent approach.

To easily access a report for what current job title specialties are for your team, you can follow these steps:

- Log into Workday
- Type "My Team Job Title Specialties" in the search bar
- Click "OK" for your organization

For Development, Infrastructure, and Quality departments

- Who should have a specialty:
 - ICs: Job grade 11 and below should have Stage and/or primary group (if applicable)
 - People Mgrs: Managers, Senior Engineering Managers, and Group Product Managers managing ICs should have Stage and/or primary group (if applicable)
- When requesting a job title specialty update, please follow the following formatting:
 - Review Product/Categories and make sure the group names you use match these. If they don't, please connect with your Product Manager to confirm and work with them to update if needed.
 - Add both stage and group in the job title specialty field
 - Example: Add "Govern: Authentication" instead of "Authentication"
 - Important: Please ensure that you leave a space after the colon (:) between stage and group.. For example, Create: Source Code is correct formatting, and Create:Source Code is incorrect formatting. This helps ensure that when pulling reports we have accurate counts for investment alignment.
 - Review each person and make sure it only lists one group.
 - Note: In situations where there are two groups, pick the primary group.
- Ensure all specialty information is in the Job Title Specialty field as opposed to the Job Title Specialty (Multi-Select) field.

For Customer Support department

- Who should have a specialty:
 - ICs: Job Grade 9 and below to indicate the focus of the role being Global, Federal or Readiness (if applicable)
 - People Managers: Managers and Senior Managers to indicate the primary focus of their role (if applicable).

Note: For Support it's not tied to stage, group but rather the focus of the role that is not captured in the Job title.

- When requesting a job title specialty update, please make sure to use any of the below focus areas when reaching out to People Connect:
 - Global

- Federal
- Readiness

Manager Self-Service in Workday: Job Information Change

Job information changes are used to update any information on the team member's profile in Workday that is not compensation related. The current manager submits all job information change requests (including requests to change team member's manager). These changes are required through Workday to have an approval trail for compliance reasons.

For Current Manager: Processing Manager Changes

This job aid will help provide people managers with instructions on how to move team members to another manager within Workday. If the manager you need to move your direct report to is not available, it likely means they do not have a 'supervisory organization' created. Even if their management level shows 'Manager' a supervisory organization is needed in Workday for a team member to have a direct report. Supervisory organizations should have a name unique to the team they are managing (e.g. Commercial Sales - EMEA, Content Marketing (John Smith), Backend Engineering - Ruby). Please reach out to the People Connect team via HelpLab with the name of the team member who needs the supervisory organization set up, the unique name, and the effective date of the supervisory organization. We can gladly help set it up in Workday.

Note for Sales Managers: If team members are not moved under the correct sales manager in Workday, credits will not be rolled-up to the correct manager for sales commissions. See additional promotion and transfer considerations for commissionable roles here.

For People Connect: Processing Manager changes

1. The People Connect Specialist logs into Workday via Okta to approve the transfer in Workday > click on Inbox in top right corner
1. Review the business process titled 'Transfer' and reason 'Manager to Another Manager' > click: approve

Process for EBA to update senior leadership:

1. Create a case in HelpLab for the People Connect team requesting the changes to be made in Workday and provide an effective date.
1. The People Connect Team will process the changes in Workday.
1. Once complete, the team will follow-up with the EBA to let them know all changes have been made.
1. The EBA will then need to make the changes on the Team Page.

For People Connect: Processing Job Information Change Requests

1. Audit all job change requests and ensure the changes are captured in the Payroll tracker.
1. In case of Job Title Specialty change requests, managers will reach out to the People Connect Team HelpLab to have a team members Speciality updated in Workday.
 - The People Connect Team member should check whether the title already exists in Workday. If not, check whether the Job Speciality has been added to the respective departments Handbook page (example: <<https://handbook.gitlab.com/handbook/engineering/ai/search/>> or if the People Connect Team members are tagged in a respective issue to have it added. If unclear, reach out to the respective People Business Partner).

Department Transfers

If you are interested in applying for an open role, please do so through Greenhouse or the internal job board, link found on the new-vacancies Slack channel.

Please understand the following eligibility guidelines that need to be met to be able to proceed with your application:

- Guidelines for performance eligibility:
 - Team members who are assessed at a Performing or Exceeding Performance level during Talent Assessment are eligible to be considered for another role
 - Team members whose Performance is assessed as Developing or are actively undergoing written performance management, may not be eligible. These situations require manager and/or PBP approval to proceed.
 - Team members that have not had a Talent Assessment require manager and/or PBP approval to proceed
 - Time in role eligibility will be 6 months in current role. Exceptions to this:
 - Business Impact (revenue-dependencies, interim role to perm)
 - Business driven transfers (example of realignments)
 - SDR/BDR 12 months in role

Please note that internal applicants are required to speak with their current manager or People Business Partner prior to application submission. An official application is signaled by a team member applying to the open role or reaching out to the talent acquisition team. Informal conversations about the role do not require a team member to inform their manager. If you have concerns about communicating your interest in an internal role to your manager, please reach out to your People Business Partner.

For more information please visit our Internal Hiring Process handbook page.

For Internal Applicants

Different Job Family

- If you are interested in transferring, simply submit an application for the new position. If you are not sure the new role is a good fit, schedule time with the hiring manager to learn more about the role and the skills needed. If after that conversation you are interested in pursuing the internal opportunity, it is recommended that you inform your current manager of your intent to apply for the role. While you do not need their permission to apply, we encourage you to be transparent with them. Most will appreciate that transparency since it's generally better than learning about your move from someone reaching out to them as a reference check. You can also use this as an opportunity to discuss the feedback that would be given to the potential new manager regarding your performance from your current and/or past managers.
- Transfers must go through the application process for the new position by applying on the jobs page. The team member may go through the entire interview process outlined on the vacancy description. Common exceptions to the standard interview process are behavioral or "values alignment" stages. The Recruiter will document the reason behind alterations to the standard interview plan in the team member's Greenhouse profile. If you have any questions about the role or the process, please reach out to your Department or Division's People Business Partner and/or please visit our Internal Hiring Process handbook page. In all cases, the applicable People Business Partner should be informed via email, before a transfer is confirmed.

- In the case of transfers, it is expected and required that the gaining manager will check with internal references at GitLab limited to the previous and current managers; please do not conduct internal reference checks with peers or direct reports. For questions or exceptions, please engage your recruiter and people business partner.
- It is recommended (but not required) that the applicant, current manager, or gaining manager create a private Slack channel to help coordinate the transfer. Invite anyone who will be involved such as the relevant managers, directors, people business partners, finance business partners, and recruiters.
- If the current manager needs to backfill the role in Engineering they should follow this process. For other divisions they should work with their department leader, recruiter, and the Finance Business Partner to confirm that a backfill is available. When the transfer is confirmed, the current manager should work with recruiter and Finance Partner to obtain a GHP ID for the backfill and open the role in Greenhouse.
- Before the offer is made the recruiter will confirm with the team member and the gaining manager that they have indeed reached out to the current manager. They will discuss the new opportunity and that an offer will be made to the team member.
- Talent Acquisition team will ensure that, if applicable, the position has been posted for at least three business days before an offer is made.
- Compensation and equity may be reviewed during the hiring process to reflect the new level and position.
- If after interviews, the manager and the GitLab team member want to proceed with the transfer, internal references should be checked. While a manager cannot block a transfer, there is often good feedback that can help inform the decision. It is advised that the GitLab team member talk to their manager to explain their preference for the new team and to understand the feedback that will be given to the new manager. It should also be noted, that performance requirements are not always equal across roles, so if a GitLab team member struggles in one role, those weakness may not be as pronounced in the new role, and vice versa.
- The Recruiter and Hiring Manager will review the offer details with the internal candidate and a Job Change Letter will be sent out by the Total Rewards team following the hiring process
- If the team member is transferred, the new manager will announce in the team-member-updates Slack Channel and begin any additional onboarding or offboarding necessary. Before the new manager makes the transfer announcement they must confirm with the team members current manager that the current team has been informed about the team members new position and transfer.
- Team members changing functional roles should complete onboarding for the new function. For example, a Backend Engineer who transferring to become or work on Frontend work should do Frontend Engineer onboarding.

Same Job Family, Different Department or Specialty

If the team member is staying in the current Job Family, but changing their Specialty or Department (ex: moving from Plan to Secure or moving from Development to Infrastructure), the above steps will be followed. The recruitment procedure might be shortened if the requirements for the role are the same. At a minimum we ask that the hiring manager interview the team member.

If selected for the role, a Job Change Letter will be sent by the People Connect Team outlining the changes to department and specialty for the People Connect team to process in Workday. If the current manager needs to backfill the role, they should reach out to the Finance Partner.

Internal Department Transfers

If you are interested in another position within your department and the manager is also your manager you must do the following:

- Present your proposition to your manager with a Google doc.
- If the vacancy is advertised on the jobs page, to be considered, you must submit an application. If there is no vacancy posting, one must be created and shared in the new-vacancies channel so that everyone has the opportunity to apply and be considered.
- The manager will assess the function requirements; each level should be defined in the vacancy description.
- If approved, your manager will need to obtain approval from their manager, through the relevant chain of command.
- Compensation and equity will be reevaluated to ensure it adheres to the compensation calculator. Do not send the proposal until this part is included.
- If the team member is transferred, the manager will announce in the team-member-updates Slack channel and begin any additional onboarding or offboarding necessary.

Internal Transfer Start Date

If a GitLab team member is chosen for a new role, the managers should agree on a reasonable and speedy transfer plan. Up to 4 weeks is usually a reasonable period, but good judgment should be used on completing the transfer in a way that is in the best interest of the company, impacted people, and projects.

The agreed upon transfer date should be reflected in the offer letter in Greenhouse to ensure transfer date alignment between current manager, new manager, and transferring team member. This is essential to ensure that both teams are able to plan and be set up for success. It is important to note that it is typically the former team of the team member that shuffles to ensure workload of the departing team member is covered while a backfill is hired. This is to ensure a smooth and speedy transfer and a positive team member experience. When aligning on a start date, please also consider payroll alignment when selecting a start date.

Delaying transfers should be avoided to ensure a good team member experience for the transferring individual, however, if due to extenuating circumstances a transfer date needs to be pushed out, both managers need to agree on a new transfer date to communicate to the team member.

Department Transfers Manager Initiated

All transfers should eventually be initiated by team members.

- During the application process, we highly encourage the hiring manager to be transparent with the team member's current manager. Doing so will allow the current manager the maximum amount of time to plan for the transfer and speed up the overall process.
- The hiring manager should post the open role in the new-vacancies Slack channel to attract all potentially interested candidates.

- It is highly discouraged to reach out to a potential candidate directly without talking to their manager first. The hiring manager should share their intention of reaching out to the current manager's team member to ensure transparency and awareness.

When promotion is a consideration - Within Same Job Family

If a team member sees a vacancy posted that is the next level up within their job family (for example an Intermediate Frontend Engineer sees a vacancy for an Senior Frontend Engineer), the team member should have a conversation with their manager about exploring that opportunity.

It is the manager's responsibility to be honest with the team member about their performance as it relates to their promotion readiness. If the manager agrees that the team member is ready, then they will follow the cyclical promotion calibration process. If they do not think the team member is ready for the promotion, they should walk through their career development document, as well as work on a promotion plan with the team member. The manager should be clear that the team member is not ready for the promotion at this time and what they need to work on. If the team member would still like to submit an application for the role after the conversation with their manager, they can apply and go through the same interview process as external candidates. The recruiter will confirm with the manager that the promotion readiness conversation has taken place before the internal interview process starts.

For Internal Applicants - Different Job Family

If the role is in a completely different job family (within their own division or in a completely different division, for example, if a Product Designer is interested in a Product Manager role), the team member must submit an application via the posting on GitLab's internal job board on Greenhouse.

After the team member applies, the recruiter will reach out to the team member to connect regarding compensation for the role. In some cases, the compensation may be lower than the current one. Once the team member understands and agrees with the compensation for the new role, they can continue the process.

Internal and external candidates will follow the same process with the exception of the full screening call (which will instead be a short conversation to discuss compensation, as mentioned above). However, if the internal applicant will be staying in the same division and the executive level interview is a part of the process, the executive may choose to skip their interview. All interview feedback and notes will be captured in the internal team member's Greenhouse profile, which will be automatically hidden from the team member. After interviews are completed, internal "reference checks" will be completed with the applicant's current manager by the new hiring manager.

It is recommended that team members inform their manager of their desire to move internally and their career aspirations. Your manager should not hear about your new opportunity from the new hiring manager; it should come from the team member prior to the new hiring manager checking in for references with the current manager.

If you are unsure of the role, set up a coffee chat with the hiring manager to introduce yourself. Express your interest in the role and your desire to learn more about the vacancy requirements and skills needed. If after that conversation you do not feel that you are qualified or comfortable making the move, ask the hiring manager to provide guidance on what you can do to develop yourself so you will be ready for the next opportunity. It may also be possible to set up an internship for learning with the hiring manager.

Announcing Internal Promotions/Transfers

While the Organization Change Checklist aims to kick off the logistics of switching roles, the guidelines below are meant to guide the communication of internal promotions and transitions to ensure consistency and alignment from all parties involved.

1. Prior to any company-wide announcement, the team member should be given the opportunity to share the news with their immediate team members.

1. Promotions typically also include equity grants. If the equity grant amount is not listed on the Job Change Letter, managers can navigate to Workday to find the amount to communicate to the team member following these steps:

- Navigate to Workday
- Go to promoted team member's profile
- Click Job on the left panel
- Click Worker History from the tabs at the top.
- Click the Business Process with Stock Grant in the title and effective date of the promotion.
- This will open a new page to view the event. Scroll down to the Stock Grant Details table to see the proposed amount.

Please Note: Equity grants require board approval. When communicating, managers should highlight that this equity amount is the proposed amount, but will not be officially approved until the next board meeting.

1. The new manager should post the announcement in the team-member-updates Slack channel. This should ideally happen (timezone permitting) on the same day that the candidate signs their Job Change Letter.

1. For cases where announcing on the same day the Job Change Letter is signed is not possible, the announcement should be no more than 24 hours after the candidate has signed.

1. Following this initial announcement, the current manager can proceed with making this announcement in other relevant team-specific channels.

NOTE: Although the Total Rewards and People Connect Team may have visibility into promotions or transfers due to the administration of updating information as part of their roles, they should not communicate with the team member about their promotion/transfer until an announcement has been made.

For People Success & Talent Acquisition Team

Vacancies will be posted internally using the Greenhouse internal job board for at least 3 business days. If a role is not posted internally there must be a business case documented in the Workday documents of the team member who received the new role. See Department Transfers for additional details.

More details can be found in the Job Change Letter section.

Organization Change Checklist

An Organization Change Checklist, previously known as the Career Mobility issue, is opened to ensure that a team member's access is reviewed when they meet one of the following criteria:

- Migration from Manager to Individual Contributor (defined as a decrease in management level from Mgr+ to IC within Workday)
- Migration of Team (for purposes of Organization Change Checklist, team changes are defined as a change in both manager & cost center)

Individual contributors moving into a Management level may or may not need their access to be reviewed, please check-in with your current and new manager to confirm this step. If access should be updated follow the AR process documented here.

Or, if the team member already has access to the systems and tools needed, the manager can open 'Becoming a GitLab Manager' and 'Interview Training' issues that are housed within the Training Project in GitLab.

- To open the 'Becoming a GitLab Manager' and 'Interview Training' issues visit the Training project in GitLab -> Issues -> New Issue.
- Under 'Description' select the specified project template and then select Create Issue at the bottom.

When an Organization Change Checklist may not be needed (but can be requested):

- Team/Speciality change but no access request needed

Any other role changes where a Manager feels their team member's role may require an Organization Change Checklist, please reach out to the People Connect team via HelpLab.

Organization Change Checklist Creation Process

The People Connect Specialist in the respective rotation will open a Organization Change Checklist when an alert is received from Workday (for qualifying team members based on the criteria) and will be assigned to the migration for support.

The People Connect Leads will pull a monthly report to check that any qualifying team members did get their Organization Change Checklist is opened.

The Organization Change Checklist will then be created by the People Connect Team member assigned by using the automated Slack command on the effective date or within 3 days after the effective date to allow for the managers to start preparing for the team member's transition.

Important things to ensure:

1. Add a due date of two weeks from the migration effective date.
1. Check to see that the previous Manager and new Manager is listed correctly in the issue.
1. Complete all applicable tasks under the People Connect list.

Important Tasks once the Organization Change Checklist has been finalized

Actions by both the current and new managers are required to set the team member up for success:

- Creating the correct Access Requests for systems needed and for systems no longer needed.
- Create any training issue that may be required.
- Reminding the team member to update their title on the team page, on their GitLab profile, in Zoom, in Slack and on professional networks like LinkedIn. If relevant, remind them to order new business cards as well.
- If we are in the middle of Annual Compensation Review, it is encouraged that the current manager and new manager arrange a successful handover of the feedback, whether sync or async.
- All migration tasks by the applicable team members need to be completed within 2 weeks of the migration start date.

Promotions and Transfers of Employees in Commissionable Roles

This section describes the steps required for promoting or transferring employees with a Sales Commission Plan. When a promotion or transfer occurs, it is important for Sales Managers to follow specific steps to ensure a smooth employee experience during the transition. The Sales Operations, Sales Finance, and the Commissions team need to be informed so the necessary systems can be updated and the team member can receive a new compensation plan.

Note These steps are in addition to all other steps required for promotions and transfers in partnership with the People team.

For the Current Sales Managers

1. Determine the right path for the promotion and/or transfer. Our promotion process can be found in the handbook. For transfers, please confirm if there is an open role with your Sales recruiting team. Ensure necessary stakeholders and processes are followed in advance of processing a promotion and/or transfer.
1. Open a Territory Change Request issue to inform Sales Operations of the change so they can update Salesforce and the Territory Mapping SSOT.

For Sales Recruiting

1. Open a Utilizing Backfill Headcount issue to inform Sales Finance of the promotion/transfer so they can update Adaptive.
1. Tag the appropriate members of the Sales Finance and Sales Commissions team as indicated in the 'Approval' section of the issue template.

For Sales Finance

1. Update the team member's profile in Adaptive to account for the promotion/transfer.
1. Partner with leadership and the People team on whether we need to open a requisition to backfill the empty role from which the team member was promoted/transferred.

For Sales Commissions

1. Every month, identify new hires, promotions, and transfers in Workday.
1. Create a monthly issue to notify the Sales Strategy and Analytics team of headcount changes. The Sales Strategy and Analytics team assigns quotas^[^1] to sales employees within 4 weeks of the employee's hire/promotion/transfer date.

1. The quotas are submitted to the Commissions team to then add to the Xactly system where all commissions are managed and monitored.

1. Issue new compensation plan to the New Sales Manager for approval and release to team member.

^1]: During fiscal year planning, Sales Strategy and Analytics work closely with Sales Management to assign values (full quota) to all the different Sales Territories. When a new sales employee joins, their ASM assigns them a territory (at which point there is a pre-determined value), and Sales Commissions applies a [ramp schedule based on the employee's start date and role to arrive at their carried quota.

For Team Members: Transitioning To A New Manager

There are several situations at GitLab that could lead to team members changing managers, including promotions, lateral transfers, company restructuring, manager resignation, etc. The process of building a new relationship with a new manager can be uncertain at times, but there are resources to help this transition process go smoothly:

- Transitioning 1-1s is a very important part of manager transitions. This helps ensure the new manager is up to speed on important discussions, deliverables, etc. so this information does not get lost in the transition.
- The Organization Change Checklist Handover template helps to ensure accomplishments, strengths, development areas, etc. are all captured with evidence moving forward. This makes sure career development progress continues and is not lost with manager changes.
- Sharing your most recent 360 feedback review and most recent performance review with your new manager can also be a great way to align on your strengths and improvement areas and discuss how they can partner with you in developing both.

For Managers : Moving a Team Member to your team

When a new team member moves to your team, in addition to the items above in "Transitioning To A New Manager", there are some additional things to consider for the new manager.

- Do an initial confidential handover for any confidential topics between the previous and new manager (separate from the 1-1-1 with the previous manager, new manager, and team manager).
- Do this confidential handover periodically (perhaps 2 weeks, 4 weeks and 6 weeks after transition). This will allow not only initial questions and considerations to come up, but also new ones as they arise.
- Include in this handover the information you need for talent assessment planning that was confidential and not discussed in the 1-1-1.
- If your new direct report is potentially up for promotion in the next 6 months, be sure to transition the information that supports from the previous manager and be the DRI to drive this forward, including both information discussed in the 1-1-1 and any confidential information discussed in the confidential handover.

For Team Members: Updating Your Title After A Role Change

Your profile will need to be updated in a few places to reflect your new title change. Including, but not limited to:

- GitLab profile
- GitLab Team Page
- Zoom profile
- Slack profile (updated within Slack)
- Gmail signature (updated within Gmail), see guidelines
- Guide profile, if you take part in hiring

Footnotes

SECTION: people-group/pronouns.md

What are pronouns?

At GitLab, Diversity, Inclusion, & Belonging are written into our values. Part of creating an inclusive workplace centers on the language that we use when we communicate with each other.

This includes the usage of pronouns, which are "a word or a group of words that one may substitute for a noun or noun phrase."

Importance

It's important that we understand pronouns and their function, because they go beyond simple substitution of nouns in modern culture. Pronouns are a topic of much discussion lately, and they're an important part of our everyday lives. Pronouns come in many shapes and sizes, so here are some examples:

- > I didn't know they painted their kitchen pink this weekend!
- > Have you ever seen a double rainbow? It is positively life-changing.
- > Someone left their costume on the stage.

The reason why pronouns have become a highly-discussed topic is because they are also a core part of our identities, and they enable us to express our gender identities more accurately. In order to promote a more inclusive environment, GitLab is committed to recognizing and using the pronouns that our team members identify for themselves.

Types of pronouns

Due to the nature of language, there are many pronouns that one could choose from. Perhaps the most common of these are she/her, they/them, and he/him.

The way people display pronouns vary, but most people choose to display their personal pronouns in the format shown above. Occasionally, one might also include the corresponding possessive pronoun, such as they/them/theirs, as a matter of personal preference or to provide additional clarity.

Singular they

The use of "they" as a singular pronoun is often cited as grammatically incorrect, and some argue that it should only be used as a plural pronoun. While the plural "they" did arise before singular "they," the singular they has been in use since the 14th century.

Historically, the singular "they" was used in place of a singular pronoun where the gender of the subject is not known, as in this example from Wikipedia:

> Somebody left their umbrella in the office. Could you please let them know where they can get it?

More recently, "they" has seen an increase in usage as a singular pronoun for known individuals who do not identify as a man or woman. Simply use "they" as you normally would in a sentence when referring to someone who uses they/them pronouns, and you're all set! If you ever get stuck, Grammarly has a great write-up on singular they.

Multiple pronouns

You might see multiple sets of pronouns listed for one person, such as:

> she/her or they/them

Or even simply:

> she/they

This usually signals that the individual is fine if you use either set of pronouns for them. Generally, pronouns are listed in order of preference, so it's best to use the first one in the list if you're unsure.

Neopronouns

While many individuals choose between she/her, they/them, and he/him, some folks don't identify with these.

As a result, one might choose pronouns that let them more accurately reflect their gender identity, such as ze/hir.

There are many neopronouns in use, which makes it difficult to list all of them in one place.

If you're interested in neopronouns, you can read more about them in this NY Times article

(requires subscription) and on Pronouns.org Neopronouns guide. Pronouns.org also contains many additional pronoun-related guides.

General etiquette

As with someone's name, you should respect the pronouns that someone shares with you when referring to them. If someone uses he/him pronouns, it would be inappropriate to refer to him using other pronouns, unless specified. Just as it would be disrespectful to intentionally misgender you, you should make the effort to correctly gender other people.

Making mistakes

Mistakes happen! Every now and then, you might slip and use the incorrect pronoun for someone. This could happen for a variety of reasons, so it's good to be aware of what to do if you accidentally use the wrong pronouns.

If you've accidentally used the wrong pronoun when referring to someone, simply correct yourself and move on. Since we all make mistakes sometimes, it's usually not necessary to draw additional attention.

If you suspect that your mistake might have hurt someone's feelings, it's best to reach out to them one-on-one to check in. A quick apology for using the wrong pronouns can go a long way! This is especially useful if you noticed your mistake after the fact, perhaps after seeing someone's pronouns listed in Slack.

Setting your pronouns in applications

GitLab.com

You can set your GitLab.com pronouns on your GitLab profile.

Google Mail (Gmail)

You can set your pronouns in your email signature.

Slack

You can set your Slack pronouns on your Slack profile.

Zoom

You can set your Zoom pronouns through the Zoom web portal.

SECTION: people-group/quarterly-talent-review.md

A high performance culture starts with a healthy organizational structure and team. The Quarterly Talent Review (QTR) is a strategic mechanism designed to bring our E-Group leaders together with their respectively aligned key People Group counterparts in a single session to review key Talent metrics and strategy on a quarterly basis with the ultimate goal of driving forward a tightly aligned divisional Talent Strategy.

Goals and benefits of the QTR include the ability to:

- Connect dots and draw themes across multiple data sources that may not have been as evident reviewed in isolation
- Create more connection and alignment across all departments within the People Group as one team
- Optimize time and efficiency across the board for our E-Group leaders
- Ensure we maintain a regular and proactive pulse on key Talent metrics
- Align on and communicate a tailored and data driven division Talent Strategy going in to each fiscal year

Quarterly Talent Review Timeline

The QTR report will be delivered to PBPs on the 15th day at the start of each quarter (dates below). This report will serve as the foundation for the discussions with division leaders.

FY25 Talent QTR Report Dates

- Q1/Q2 - August 15th
- Q3 - November 15th
- Q4 - January 15th

Quarterly Talent Review Process

1. Report Distribution

- When: Reports will be shared to PBPs by the 15th day of the first month of each quarter.
- What: Each report will contain the org health data specific to each division and any relevant metrics to be reviewed in the upcoming Talent QTR meetings. A detailed overview of data included in each report is included below. Where applicable, CoE leaders will also have the opportunity to include a Top of Mind overview slide to ensure that there is an opportunity to share key strategic initiatives as part of this forum.

2. Prep Call

- When: PBPs and People division key stakeholders should schedule their initial prep call shortly after receiving the report and completing their initial review, ideally within one week of report delivery.
- Purpose: The prep call allows PBPs and People Division key stakeholders to align on key topics, identify areas of focus, and strategize for the Talent QTR meeting with the division leadership.
- Attendees: Division PBP(s), divisional TA partner, divisional DIB partner, and other People division key stakeholders where applicable (for example If there is a concern raised related to data for TMR, the divisional TMR partner should be included)

3. Distribution of Report to Leadership

- When: 3-4 business days prior to the QTR meeting with the division leader.
- Purpose: Allow leaders time prior to the meeting to review the QTR report and add any questions/observations to the meeting agenda.

4. Quarterly Talent Review with E-Group

- When: The QTR should take place by the end of the first month of the quarter, giving adequate time for review and actions. PBPs should work with E-Group EBAs to plan these sessions in advance as a standing ongoing touchpoint.
- Purpose: During this meeting, PBPs and People Division key stakeholders will review the org health report with division leaders, discuss priorities for each division, address any COE-related initiatives, and agree on action items and follow-up steps.

Report Overview

The QTR report is designed to provide division leadership with key organizational metrics across multiple areas. Below is a breakdown of the core metrics, organized into relevant categories:

1. Workforce Metrics

- Span of control
- Attrition rates
- Headcount
- Promotion rate

2. Learning and Development

- L&D program participation
- G&D spend

3. Team Member Relations

- Team member relations cases

4. Executive Summary and Action Items

- Executive summary of key takeaways

- Leadership action items for follow-up
 - This slide will be updated at the beginning of each fiscal year with recommended actions for each division that are rooted in the data that is shared. This will serve as the core divisional Talent Strategy for the FY.
 - Actions on this slide will continue to be tracked during each review and updated as needed depending on progress made and what each quarter's data reveals.

5. COE Updates (DIB, TA)

- What is top of mind for Diversity, Inclusion & Belonging (DIB)
 - This slide will allow DIB to orient leaders on what the team is focused on and the top priorities are for each respective division that aligns with the data shared.
- What is top of mind for Talent Acquisition (TA)
 - This slide will allow TA to orient leaders on what the team is focused on and the top priorities are for each respective division that aligns with the data shared.
- Opportunity on an as-needed basis for other People division key stakeholders to spotlight key upcoming initiatives.

SECTION: people-group/relocation.md

Relocation / Address Change

This process is managed by the People Connect team as the DRI. For any questions not addressed below, please submit a request via HelpLab.

Moving to a new location is an exciting adventure, and at GitLab, we want to encourage team members to utilize the flexibility that our relocation policy offers. However, there are multiple aspects to consider including eligibility, possible impact on compensation (including equity and benefit eligibility) and the impact on your role at GitLab.

It's important to note that for both candidates about to join GitLab or existing team members all relocation requests will require business approval, which will consider the ability of the team member to drive results in the new location and the impact of a relocation on the departmental budget. Consult your FP&A Partner as soon as possible to ensure the compensation change is accounted for in the department budget.

A relocation that results in no change in compensation can be approved by the team member's direct manager. Relocations resulting in an increase in compensation must be approved by the team member's direct manager, and location factor changes that are $>.2$ will require direct manager, VP as well as an e-group Member approval.

Importance of Communicating Location

All Team Members are required to request an approval to relocate prior to moving. Moving to a new location is an exciting adventure, and at GitLab, we want to encourage team members to utilize the flexibility that our relocation policy offers. However, there are multiple aspects to consider including eligibility, possible impact on compensation (including equity and benefit eligibility) and the impact on your role at GitLab. The consequences of not communicating to the appropriate group could result in disciplinary action up to and including termination, depending on the circumstances. Having team members working outside of their contractual location poses potential tax liability for both GitLab and the team member. For this reason, it is important to communicate transparently and promptly with your manager and with the People Team.

Team members must reside in their primary location for at least 183 days (consecutive or not) within a calendar year. Team members may live or work outside their permanent location, as specified in Workday, for a maximum total of 183 days (approximately 6 months) per calendar year. GitLab is responsible for reporting and remitting taxes based on the location where a team member performs their work (i.e., earned income) and ensuring employment compliance based on each team member's work location. This means that at least half of the time worked must be from the primary location. Please be aware that spending extended time in another country or state may have tax implications. Team members are encouraged to consult their personal tax advisor to understand the tax rules applicable in each location. If you believe you may exceed (or has already exceeded) the 183 days limit (or a lower threshold in certain countries), contact the People Connect Team immediately. Managers are responsible for ensuring that team members are abiding by the requirement to be in their primary location for the required amount of time and reporting when someone has or is about to exceed the limit.

Additionally, certain roles require team members to be present in the location for which they were hired to support business activities. Sales, for example, may require travel to customer sites and for the team member to be available for customers within a specific time zone. All Team members are required to obtain manager approval to work outside of their primary location regardless of the length of time at that location. Managers can deny a request or ask for a team member to change their request due to the impact on business results. A team member who fails to communicate and/or seek approval to work outside of their primary location could also result in underperformance management action or loss of employment, depending on the circumstances. Long-term relocations (greater than 183 days/6 months stay) must follow the application and approval process outlined below.

Digital Nomads

Team Members who want to leverage the flexibility of technology to work remotely while traveling to different locations may do so while adhering to the guidelines of the long term relocation process. Digital Nomad team members are permitted to reside and work from any country with considerations for a maximum of 183 days (approximately 6 months) without having to complete a long term relocation request. Remember that team members must still reside in their primary location for at least 183 days per year. Balancing flexibility with legal, tax, and compliance requirements is key in maintaining a proper employment solution at GitLab.

Digital nomads' presence in a location for an extended period could risk classification of a permanent establishment for GitLab in that country. GitLab may be required to comply with tax liabilities or to formally register to operate business in that location.

Team members are responsible for understanding the tax and legal requirements to work while on a digital nomad visa including costs associated with obtaining a visa. Digital nomad visas are typically granted with the understanding that you will work only for foreign employers. If we have an established entity, travel to such locations under the nomad visa may be prohibited. Some countries may also require digital nomads to report their earnings or register their presence.

Working in a new location for more than 183 days will qualify as a long term relocation and your compensation and employment agreement will be updated to reflect the new location which can impact your ability to maintain the digital nomad visa work authorization. Any time spent in temporary locations for 183 days or less (short term relocation) will not result in any change to compensation or employment agreements based on the new location.

Short-Term Stay Definition

If you are not changing your permanent location (where you maintain permanent residency), but instead are traveling to different locations over a period of time, you are responsible for maintaining your health insurance, visas, and any other item directly relating to your travel. Consider discussing your travel plans with your medical providers so that you can be aware of the resources available to you, should you need them.

Since any short-term stay is your decision and not required by GitLab as part of your role, you will not be eligible to use the Business Accident Travel Policy or submit any expenses related to your travel. If you are hired in a role requiring a time zone alignment, you must still be able to fulfill that requirement.

If your short-term stay is for less than 6 months in a new location, there should be no need to update your address in Workday.

If you plan on staying in a location for more than 6 months in a single calendar year, or are in that location for an aggregate of more than 6 months in a single calendar year, that becomes your residence and you must complete the long-term relocation process described below. In most countries, tax residency is determined by the place where a GitLab Team Member keeps its vital interests over the span of a calendar year. This is the place where you are registered, where your significant other (SO) and/or dependents live, the place where you work, where you live, where you keep your subscriptions etc.

Please note that in some jurisdictions, even short term stays can add up to more than 183 days per year and can subject you to payroll tax in the new location. Always make sure to check with your tax advisor before traveling to any location where you will be performing work for an extended period of time, whether it is more than or less than 183 days.

Considerations for Short-Term Travel

GitLab is an all-remote company that allows its team members to work from most places globally, however, some places are subject to trade control restrictions. For this reason, team members cannot take company-owned devices to or otherwise work from US-embargoed countries or regions under any circumstances. The U.S. embargoed country list includes but not limited to Cuba, Iran, North Korea, Syria, Russia, Belarus, and the Crimea, Donetsk, and Luhansk regions of Ukraine.

GitLab provides this information, which is subject to change without notice, to facilitate GitLab users' compliance with applicable trade control law. Additional information can be found on the Trade Compliance page in the handbook.

Some countries may not be on the US-embargoed list but still require prior GitLab notice and/or approval before traveling to or working from these locations. If you have any questions do not hesitate to contact the People Team via HelpLab.

Long-Term Relocation

Long-Term Relocation Definition

A long-term relocation means that you will establish yourself in a new location. If you are spending more than six months in one calendar year in one location as part of an extensive period of travel and/or will have your mail delivered to an address in a different address, please follow the steps below to request a long-term relocation.

It is at the company's discretion to determine whether it can approve the relocation:

- Some job positions require GitLab team members to be located in particular countries, locations, regions, or time zones. For example, a salesperson hired to serve a specific region may need to stay in that region, or an engineer hired to respond to customer requests in a specific region/country.
- GitLab only allows relocations to countries in which we already have a formed entity that carries no hiring restrictions. Review our Country hiring guidelines to see if the country is eligible for a relocation.
- GitLab cannot accept relocation requests to a location where there might be the possibility of the formation of a new entity until it is formally established, open for hiring, and the business objectives are fully understood.
- You can only work in countries where you can establish eligibility to work in the country without visa sponsorship provided by GitLab.
- Relocations can also result in an adjustment to compensation, including equity eligibility, based on the location and the location factor. Depending on the location factor and the benefits offered in the particular country, the adjustment will result in an increase or a decrease to the compensation package. The Company retains discretion to determine whether it can support the relocation due to the required adjustment.

At the onset, this practice may seem harsh when moving to a lower-paid location. One might argue that people should be paid the same regardless of where they live. However, if you look at it from another angle and compare this practice to what most companies do, it should make more sense. For example, if you work for a company with physical locations and they require you to work out of an office or close to an office, you'd have to live in that area. If you wanted to move to a location where they did not have a physical site, you would have no alternative but to resign and seek new employment in your new location. You would find that companies in the area pay at a locally competitive rate.

Now, let's say the company did have a site in your new location and they offered the flexibility to transfer. If they did not have a similar position open, you would have to either apply for a different open position in the same company or resign and apply externally (back to the realization that other companies will pay at a locally competitive rate). If you were lucky enough that they did have a similar role in the new location, a transfer would come with a pay rate based on the local market to ensure equity across all incumbents (people in the job) by location.

Adjusting pay according to the local market in all cases is fair to everyone. We can't remain consistent if we make exceptions to the policy and allow someone to earn more than locally competitive rates for the same work others in that region are performing (or will be hired to do). Being fair to all team members is not negotiable. It is a value we stand behind and take very seriously.

Considerations and Eligibility

GitLab retains discretion at all times whether it can accommodate you to continue your role in the new location based on the requirements of your role and the potential impact on the business. In some instances a move will not align to your proposed location, (e.g. a recruiter hired in EMEA to support EMEA would not be approved to move to the US), and in other instances the company may not be able to support a relocation in the proposed location. Second, in almost all situations the compensation, including equity eligibility, can change. During the relocation process, you will learn how your compensation may be impacted and be able to make an informed decision. Any increases in compensation will need to go through an approval process. This allows the business to validate budget availability early in the process. If you like to understand how a relocation would impact you please submit a Relocation Evaluation request via HelpLab to the People Connect team.

1. If you are considering applying for a long-term relocation to a new country, the first consideration is to ensure that GitLab has an entity in the country to which you would like to move. We currently only support relocations to GitLab Entities that are open for hiring and do not have hiring restrictions or headcount caps. This is in alignment with our Country hiring guidelines.

1. Consider any changes to benefits as benefits can vary by country.

1. You must have the appropriate right to work documentation/visa requirements in the country that you are considering relocating to.

- Please note, at this moment GitLab only sponsors relocations to the Netherlands and doesn't cover relocation costs for the team member's family members also looking to relocate.

1. You must have satisfied the required one year tenure to be eligible for relocation.

Eligibility to Work

If you are interested in a long-term relocation (defined above), you need to confirm that you would be eligible to work in that location. Except for the Netherlands, GitLab does not provide any form of sponsorship or immigration aid for team members who choose to move to new countries. For more information, please refer to our Visa page. GitLab cannot assist or facilitate a process to help you become eligible to work in a location if you do not already have that eligibility. You are of course free to apply and gain that eligibility if there are steps you can take that do not involve GitLab. Once you are certain that you are eligible to work in your requested location country, you will need to provide proof of eligibility by uploading the proof in the Documents tab of your Workday profile. If you move before establishing eligibility to work, but then cannot establish eligibility to work in the new location within the first six months of residency, it may affect your ability to continue your role with GitLab.

How To Apply for a Long-Term Relocation

Team Member

1. Review the Country hiring guidelines to see if we can support your relocation.

If you are moving to a different country, please start this process no later than 3 months prior to your ideal relocation date. If your relocation is within the same country, please start the process no later than 30 days before your ideal relocation date.

1. If you are moving to a different country, upload eligibility documentation to Workday - Per the Eligibility to Work section above.

1. Complete the Relocation Request Form via HelpLab to submit the initial request to start the process. Upon completion, the form is sent automatically to People Connect who will review the details of your move and will work with the proper leaders and approvers to determine if the relocation can be approved (based on any budgetary and job duty impacts). Your manager will review if your role can be performed adequately in the new
